with Rachel Zuckert (Northwestern University)

14 May 2019, 10:00-16:30

Aarhus University, Conference Centre, Studentarhus

Kant's Critique of Judgment comprises two uneasily connected main parts: one on aesthetics and beauty, the other on biology and organisms. The biology part focuses on teleological judgments of organisms, the aesthetics part on pure judgments of taste. The common theme in both is what Kant calls reflective judgment. It is the unifying principle of beautiful nature and organic nature, and of Kant's critical philosophy more generally.
